New ways of paying for value-based care have changed the landscape for delivering services to older adults and people with disabilities. The healthcare sector now recognizes the role of community-based organizations (CBOs) in integrating long-term services to improve the quality of life for individuals. Partnerships between the sectors are resulting in cost savings for the healthcare sector and sustainability for CBOs as they leverage their expertise and diversify their revenue streams. However, these partnerships require transformation of how both sectors approach the delivery of care. This program focuses on managing multiple chronic conditions from the payer and policy perspectives. Each participant will receive a copy of the Generations Managed Care Field Guide containing seventeen articles on this topic that delve deeper in the issues of community-based care.
